

What is a Narrative?

Another word for story is NARRATIVE. There are many different types of narratives. The story could be set in space with time travelers or feature a magical school for witches. Before an author starts writing, they have to decide what kind of book they're going to write. We call that GENRE.

To better understand the many possible types of stories and how they are alike and differ, fill in the two center circles with FICTION and NON FICTION then think of all the different types of genres there are for each. Draw a line from the circle to the genre it belongs with.

The diagram consists of 14 circles arranged in three rows. The top row has four yellow circles with a jagged border. The middle row has four circles: the first and last are yellow with a jagged border, and the two in the center are red circles with the words 'FICTION' and 'NON FICTION' written inside in bold black letters. The bottom row has four yellow circles with a jagged border.

Pick any two genres and compare how they are similar and how they differ.
