CHARACTER CLASHES

Sometimes, creating a good conflict is easier if you have a really good character and a really evil villain. Choose one of the 3 different characters below, and then create a really terrible villain to oppose that hero.

THE EXPLORER

This type of character likes to push boundaries and explore the unknown. They also are driven by their own curiosity, so they do things simply because they want to. They are motivated and don't like to sit still very often.

THE CREATOR

This type of character is creative, invents new things or makes great art, and is very driven to solve problems. Sometimes, this character can be so focused on their goal that they forget about everything else. They are motivated and very determined.

THE EVERYMAN

This type of character is one everybody can relate to. In fact, we can often see ourself or a friend as this character. They understand what real life is like, and they are often not prepared for what is about to happen.

THE OUTLAW

This type of character does not live by society's rules, but they often disobey those rules to help others. They are an independent thinker and have strong morals, but they often prefer to be alone.

Which character type did you choose? What is their name?

What could be their weakness that a villain might use against them?

What is the villain's name? What powers or abilities do they have?

What makes this villain so terrible? How did they get that way?

What conflict might your character and your villain have with each other?

How will your character solve this problem, become a hero, and defeat the villain in the end?
